What's New? By Don Finkle: We just got back from a trip to the East Coast, fortunately in time for the YYC Tuesday night race with 5 minutes to spare. It was a nice night of sailing, sure beats the heat on shore. So we are catching up at work and this issue will be a bit shorter than usual as a result.

One reason for the trip was to sail on the new J/111, which we did on Monday afternoon. I have written a quick report below in the Commentary section with my thoughts on this new model. Another reason was to show customers several used boats down on LI Sound. We not only sell the boats we have listed here, we also do a fair amount of co-brokerage through our multiple-listing contacts. Co-brokerage is where one broker has the client, the other has the boat, and we match them up. Sometimes we are the ones with the boat, sometimes we have the customer who is looking for a unique product we may not have, but they want us to find one for them. Even more important that finding the boat is handling the transaction so they have someone local looking out for their interests. Keep in mind that it costs the buyer(s) nothing to use the services of the broker, and the benefits are substantial. We'll be happy to explain.

In the next week or two we have a trip planned to Annapolis, to see and sail the new Beneteau First 30, and to check out the new First 35 as well. We will report with our thoughts and some photos upon our return. First report from a friend who sailed the F30 in very light air (5 knots max) was that it handled very well, had a nice feel on the helm, and was smooth and quiet under power. No knotmeter and no other boat to tune against, so speed was an unknown.

It is always nice to see local clubs hosting major championships, and this week the Buffalo Canoe Club is hosting the Western Hemisphere and Orient Snipe Regatta. For info go to: www.buffalocanooclub.com

The season is winding down in our part of the world but there is still some good racing left. There are some out-of-town events that locals will be doing as well. Adam & Lori Burns of Youngstown will be crewing in the Farr 30 NA's in Annapolis this weekend for example.

The BCMS (Bayfront Center for Maritime Studies) cardboard boat regatta is looking for some volunteers to help on September 11, 2010 from 12:00 noon to 3:00PM. We need some jet skis with two people on each one, some people in kayaks. For more information Please call Steve Giewont 814-434-2411 or e-mail sgiewont@erie.pa.us

Commentary:

J/111 Test Sail, by Don Finkle: This past Monday I spent 3 hours in Newport, RI on the new J/111. I had seen the boat several times previously during stages of production, but this was my first time aboard the finished product. She was on a mooring in the harbor off the NYYC, and the first impression was very positive as I walked down the dock to the launch and saw her floating there. The 36 foot 111 looked awesome, fast, sleek and modern, just waiting to be taken for a spin. You know how some boats "just look right"? Well, the J/111 is one of those, the proportions are balanced, the freeboard not too high, the rig tall, the lines clean, and the whole package just seeming to be in harmony.

Once we hopped off the launch and stepped aboard the quality and proper placement of the deck hardware and rigging was readily apparent. This is a boat designed by sailors, for sailors. Clearly much of the cost of building this boat has been put into making it sail well and to be easily controlled. When we put up the sails and cast off we put this observation to the test. Yes, they got it right when it came to all the running rigging, sail controls, adjustments, etc. The carbon rig is by Hall Spars using new nano-technology resin for lighter weight and improved performance. I am a big fan of everything Hall does, their work is really clean, functional and sturdy. The shrouds are stainless rod, the backstay Dyneema, and the Genoa furler is a way-cool new Facnor tape-drive unit. This furler has a much smaller drum that is normal, and it sits much closer to the deck. This new model has the benefits of a below-deck furling unit but with much less weight and friction. I am a fan for sure.

The J/111 has outboard shrouds on swept-back spreaders that allow for a just over 100% LP headsail. Like most modern race boats the sail area is distributed vertically, with higher aspect sails that derive their power from longer luff length as opposed to overlap. Naturally the smaller headsails make for much easier tacking and visibility forward. The jib cars are adjustable fore and aft with proper tackles and also sport in-haulers. The winches are sizable, the new Harken model that uses ribs on the drum to grab the sheets without chewing them up. Stoppers were Lewmar, with the newest vertical models for main and jib halyards. I had not seen these before and they were fine-tuning them. The idea is to grab the line so tightly that the halyards do not creep as they typically do. They seemed to be working when I was aboard. The running rigging all looked to be high-quality low-stretch stuff.

The spinnaker is flown from the masthead and set on a carbon sprit that is 8 feet long, 7 feet from the headstay (the latter is set back 1 foot from the bow). Once you put that baby up the boat literally takes off. I guess it is time to talk about how she sails. The answer is the J/111 met or exceeded my expectations in all respects. The boat is 36 feet long, virtually all waterline, yet weighs just over 9,000 lbs on a slender hull with narrow waterline beam. There is very little to hold her back, and the first thing you notice is the acceleration. When you sheet in she goes. After each tack or jibe she gets back up to speed very quickly. I was a bit concerned about how she would sail in very light air, which we get a lot of around here as we know all too well. We started out in about 4-5 knots of breeze, and in that light stuff I was weaving in and around boats in the crowded harbor seemingly effortlessly. I was surprised at just how quick she went uphill in that little bit of wind. Certainly this boat will perform in our conditions. We quickly ran out of air altogether and went outside to search for wind.

On the ride out to the Ocean we powered at 8 knots with the 20HP diesel, certainly no lack of power here. The saildrive is very smooth, there is no perceptible vibration on the wheel whatsoever from the propwash. While we waited on glassy seas for a bit we looked over the rest of the boat. I should point out the helm station, which is one of the strong points of the 111. There is a molded pedestal that is situated for easy foot-bracing, either with one or both feet. I found I could sit in a number of positions, each one comfortable: with both feet aft of the wheel, or astride the wheel with one foot forward, one aft, or in front of the wheel, with one or both feet on the angled pedestal. There are also molded footrests on the cockpit sole. The traveler is mounted on the sole, with course tune aft of the traveler, fine tune forward. Both sheets and travel lines are close at hand.

That's it for the first half of the report, gotta get this out now! Come back next week to hear more.
